Abstract

This article discusses the importance of leadership skills in increasing youth social engagement. Leadership skills allow young people not only to find their place in society, but also to influence social and political change. The article pays attention to the activity of young people in solving social problems, their initiative and teamwork skills. Based on this, the creation of the necessary conditions for the development of leadership skills and the involvement of young people in social activity will contribute to the sustainable development of society.

Key words:

youth, leadership skills, social activity, initiative, teamwork, social changes, responsibility, development.

Introduction

Increasing the social activity of young people is one of the important issues of modern society. Young people are the most active generation of society, open to new events and ready for change.

Therefore, it is necessary to involve young people in changes in society, develop their leadership qualities, and create opportunities to increase social activity. This will contribute to the development of the country and the achievement of successful positions in the future on a global scale.

The spiritual, educational, and moral worldview of students plays a pivotal role in shaping their character, values, and perspective on life. These aspects are fundamental in the process of personal development and in the cultivation of responsible, conscientious citizens who contribute positively to society. The educational environment, including the influence of teachers, family, and community, serves as the primary foundation upon which a student's worldview is built. Spirituality, in this context, is not merely confined to religious beliefs but also encompasses a broader understanding of one's inner self, purpose, and connection to the world around them.

The moral dimensions of a student's worldview involve the principles that guide their actions, decisions, and interactions with others. These principles are typically derived from cultural, familial, and societal values and form the bedrock of ethical behavior. Together, these elements of a student's worldview are interwoven, guiding their understanding of right and wrong, fostering empathy, and encouraging critical thinking.

In an increasingly interconnected world, students are exposed to diverse ideas, cultures, and belief systems. This necessitates an approach to education that not only imparts academic knowledge but also encourages students to explore and define their own moral and spiritual beliefs. By promoting a holistic educational model that nurtures the spiritual, educational, and moral dimensions of students, we empower them to grow into thoughtful, compassionate, and ethical individuals who are capable of making meaningful contributions to their communities and the world at large.

This introduction to the spiritual, educational, and moral worldview of students underscores the importance of fostering these dimensions for the holistic development of the individual, ensuring they are equipped to navigate the complexities of modern life with integrity and purpose.

Increasing the social activity of young people today is one of the most important issues of modern society, and their activities contribute to the sustainable development of society. Social activity is related to the role of young people in society, their social initiatives and changes. For this process to be successful, it is necessary to develop leadership skills among young people, show initiative and a sense of responsibility to society.

Leadership skills will help young people actively participate in social processes, freely express their opinions and make changes in society

Problem solving and decision making. By developing these skills, young people can find effective solutions to social problems in society.

1. Responsibility and ethics: Young people as leaders must feel socially responsible. This will help them to develop moral values and encourage them to be ready to take responsibility for changes in society.

Importance of leadership skills in social engagement

The development of young people's leadership skills contributes to their social activity. They are:

Impact on society. Young people with leadership skills can be confident and influence important issues in public life. They are actively involved in initiating new social initiatives and solving problems.

Leadership qualities play an important role in increasing the social activity of young people. Today, young people play an important role in the development of society not only as the builder of the future, but also as active participants in today's day. "Leadership skills encourage young people not only to express their opinions, but also to act effectively in solving social problems and implementing social transformations. Skills such as initiative, communication, responsibility and collective work allow young people to work in a team, promote new ideas and contribute to the development of society.

The development of youth leadership skills will strengthen its influence on solving problems in society. At the same time, this process will serve not only the personal development of young people, but also its formation in society as responsible and active citizens.
